

Marta Jakimowicz

Art Review

Jun 5 2011

Art Review:

Aspirational life

The latest part of the on-going Jaaga Sound & Lights project, "Living Building" (May 21 to 29) was an extraordinary event whose ambitious, cutting-edge character succeeded in triggering both rudimentary sensations subtle intuitions.

More than just being curated by Freeman Murray and Archana Prasad, it seemed to have shaped from their cooperation with eight young Indian and foreign artists.

...

Andrew McWilliams integrated an abstract, slowly moving vertical image of gravitational forces and a more documentation-like audio projection about people involved with Jaaga's earlier projects.

"Figures" by Tobias Rosenberger traversed the floors passing as sometimes static and sometimes dynamic images of schematic shapes and hands drawing them that appeared to come on the textile walls and shoot through suggesting the uncertainty or subjectivity of entrenched signs.